It has an amazing four years of Bachelor's studies at Nagoya University and 2015 was particularly special. I had the remarkable opportunity to visit Chulalongkorn University in Thailand and the National University of Singapore through the Campus ASEAN Program. I also represented Nagoya University at the AC21 Student World Forum held at the University of Strasbourg in France and the University of Freiburg in Germany. The end of 2015 was especially thrilling as my parents visited Japan for my graduation ceremony to share the unforgettable moment with me.
Currently, I am continuing my studies as a Master's student at Nagoya University conducting deeper research in my field and getting ready for the job hunting season. It is time to prepare for future employment and exciting career prospects.

Program in Social Sciences

The Nagoya University G30 International Program introduces internship opportunities at leading Japanese companies to international students. I never thought that I would be doing my internship abroad when I was in Singapore, but studying in Nagoya gives me the opportunity to do so. I cannot wait to experience a brand new work culture, and learn about Japanese companies first hand. I feel excited and fortunate to be able to be a part of such a fantastic experience. I am confident that Japan will exceed all my expectations because I have heard nothing but good things about it.

Program in Social Sciences

Bachelor of Law / Bachelor of Economics

Program Outline

The Program in Social Sciences is jointly offered by the School of Law and the School of Economics, in cooperation with the School of Informatics and Sciences. It includes fundamental disciplines in political science, law, economics, business administration, and information science. Students are expected to acquire analytical skills, critical thinking skills and a high ethical awareness, which are needed for the pursuit of knowledge across disciplines.

Upon selection of their major, students receive specific guidance from professors in their chosen discipline and are expected to conduct research for their individual graduation thesis under the supervision of their school's professors.

– School of Law

School-specific Feature

The School of Law is staffed by researchers with a broad base of expertise in both Japanese and foreign legal and political systems. The politics courses offered in the G30 program cover general political theory, Japanese politics, comparative politics with a focus on Asia, and international relations. Law subjects cover general legal principles, the Japanese constitutional and legal system, comparative law, and essential features of international law. Economics courses are also open to students enrolled in the Law and Politics program.

Class sizes are small, and seminars feature in all four years of the curriculum. Students have the option of culminating their studies with submission of a graduation thesis in their final year.

Career Prospects

Alumni of the School of Law at large have pursued careers in national and local government, international institutions, NGOs, law firms, and private companies both in Japan and abroad.

The School's profile in legal assistance is widely recognized, and graduates often cross paths in this sphere.

Applicants should note that the Bachelor of Laws (LL.B.) awarded to graduates of both the G30 program and the Japanese-taught undergraduate curriculum is a general humanities degree. Professional qualification in Japan is founded on a separate postgraduate Law School program leading to the LL.M. degree. Graduates of the G30 program may apply for admission to any of the several postgraduate programs taught in English or in Japanese in the Graduate School of Law.

– School of Economics

School-specific Feature

The undergraduate program in the School of Economics is designed to provide students with a comprehensive understanding of the complex world of economics and business.

The program prepares students to confront the problems and exploit the opportunities of an increasingly interdependent, globalizing world.

We offer a wide range of courses and seminars in economics and management from the introductory to advanced level.

We also provide classes in the history of social thought.

Class size is typically small, which encourages discussion and shared purpose.

Our aim is to equip students with the knowledge and skills they need to make a significant, positive impact in their careers.

Career Prospects

Graduates are prepared for careers in government, international organizations, universities, research institutes, and business enterprises.

Additionally, our location in the largest manufacturing center of Japan provides access to world famous companies.
